

Peninsula Maternity is a Family Affair

The Peninsula Private Hospital's Maternity has been a major family health service on the Mornington Peninsula for the past 18 years. From this solid experience, the staff knows what they're doing and love doing it. This makes PPH a superior place to give birth and a great place to work.

Through extensive patient surveys over many years, PPH has discovered that the extended family is a hidden source of support for new mothers. To make the most of this, PPH encourages prospective fathers, grandparents and siblings from early on to be involved, to provide support, to learn the latest parenting techniques and to understand how the family unit changes with the arrival of a new baby.

Peninsula Private Hospital is therefore especially suitable for first-time mothers, who are invited to excellent seminars on the before, during and after of birth. The midwives are gentle, caring and extremely proud of their work ethic of welcoming new life. Using the latest technology to ensure peace of mind, they deliver high-quality care, answer all concerns, provide a breastfeeding clinic and run a 24-hour hotline for all queries regarding mother and child.

According to Kath Keating- PPH's Director of Nursing, "Our holistic approach to maternity has helped us attract and retain highly-qualified staff. Our nurses say a key reason they work with us is because of the strong focus on the family unit. An added bonus is the camaraderie, the challenging experiences and the friendly, supportive environment. Because we look after our staff as well as they look after our patients, turnover is much lower than at other hospitals. In fact, our average length of service is 10 years."
